Species - Blue Crown Conure

Housing:

- Parrots like Quakers, conures, and Senegals require a tall cage at least 18" w X 18" d X 36" h
- The enclosure must be an actual bird cage - powder coated with heavy gauge bars 3/8" apart, ideally with access to bedding to forage and play on the bottom
- Direct sunlight is physically and mentally healthy for all birds - house your parrot in a well lit area and allow daily access to sun and shade
- Housing should be placed in a draft-free room - Drafts can negate the fluffy down feathers that birds use to stay warm
- Avoid housing a parrot in high-traffic areas that will prevent the bird from acclimating, but take care not to isolate him either!
- Place toys, perches, and bowls in the cage, but do not over clutter the living space
- Always keep a large water source for the parrot to bathe

Cleaning and Maintenance:

- Routinely remove soiled food and water every day, replacing with fresh food in clean bowls
- Perches, toys, and cage will need to be cleaned every week, in addition to sweeping food and bedding from outside the cage
- Use hot water to scrub housing, or use an avian-safe cleaning product like Aviclean
- Some birds can stress out! If so, you may need to clean with a dust pan instead of a loud vacuum

Safety Tips:

Avoid animal toys with twined string. These strings can fray and pose a hazard to your bird's legs and feet! Stick to plastic, wood, and metal made with pet-safe paints and dyes.

Teflon (non-stick) coated pots and pans are the number one killer of domestic birds! They release lethal fumes when heated. Make sure you only use stainless steel and cast iron implements!

House fans rotate with enough inertia to cripple or kill any birds on impact. Even a clipped bird can gain enough thrust to fly into a fan accidentally. Turn fans off!

Avocado, apple seeds, and fruit pits contain arsenic! They are lethal to all birds! Chocolate, caffeine, and alcohol are also toxic. Do not allow access to these substances!

Let's Have Some Fun:

- Unlike many animals, socializing and play are essential for birds' health!
- Parrots are very social animals - take time to talk to your bird regularly during cleaning, feeding, and socializing
- Go slow - it may even take a few months for a parrot to willingly step up to your finger, greet your presence, or even acknowledge you in a friendly manner
- Once your bird is comfortable with you, create fun activities - fill a tub or tote with 1/2" of water, then splash in it with your hand to invite the bird. Ask him questions, speak in funny tones to invite your parrot to communicate with you!
- Birds love new experiences - Create toys for them. A crumpled piece of paper with a seed in the middle is an avian favorite!
- Most of all, spend time together. Try eating, playing, and waking up at the same time
